What is information science?

Our research group investigates arising socio-techno phenomena and evolving information systems and behaviours. In pursuit of a literate and informed society, much of our work is societal in nature. We investigate human information need and use, and we're informing future interactive information system design.

Holistic in perspective, our work is theoretically underpinned by internationally recognised expertise in:

- interactive information retrieval
- information behaviour
- information law and ethics
- information engagement

We bridge theory and practice, working collaboratively with a number of partners including:

- the National Health Service Scotland
- Glasgow City Libraries
- Barnardo's Scotland
Our research areas

Information engagement

We research how and why people engage with information, as well as how to increase user engagement, particularly in the domains of digital health and social media. This term is most common in patient studies, but can include a broad range of online information interactions, such as browsing, searching, finding, describing, sharing, repurposing, and interacting with information. We ground our work in social cognition, which seeks to understand the influence of individual cognitive processes about information on social interactions.

- Connecting young people to online mental health information through understanding their search terms and format preferences;
- Applying non-textual research methods to understanding categories of information needs among people with dementia, and developing an ontological model of these needs;
- Analysing and making recommendations for implementing linked data applications;
- Understanding how people select videos in leisure settings.

What is depression?

Depression is a low mood that lasts for a long time, and affects your everyday life.

In its mildest form, depression can mean just being in low spirits. It doesn't stop you leading your normal life but makes everything harder to do and seem less worthwhile. At its most severe, depression can be life-threatening because it can make you feel suicidal or simply give up the will to live.

It feels like I'm stuck under a huge grey-black cloud. It's dark and isolating, smothering me at every opportunity.

When does low mood become depression?

We all have times when our mood is low, and we're feeling sad or miserable about life. Usually these feelings pass in due course.

But if the feelings are interfering with your life and don't go away after a couple of weeks, or if they come back over and over again for a few days at a time, it could be a sign that you're experiencing depression.

It starts as sadness then I feel myself shutting down, becoming less capable of coping. Eventually, I just feel numb and empty.

Personal stories

my struggle with depression

By James abuse, depression, mood disorder

I have struggled with depression for longer than I can remember and it all started when I was younger. I was 2 years old and my uncle was "bored" his words not mine but so he touched me and raped me. even now I have night terrors but they don't scare me anymore they make me stronger and that's all thanks to my friends they help me thru so much and im thankful. a message to people struggling.... it gets better there are people that want to help you just have to let them. there is always someone that can help you and wants to.

About this leaflet

This leaflet is for anyone who is, or has been depressed. We hope it will also be helpful for friends and relatives.

It describes what depression feels like, some of the help that is available, how you can help yourself and how to help someone else who is depressed. It also mentions some of the things we don’t know about depression. At the end of the leaflet, there is a list of other places where you can get further information.

Introduction

We all feel fed up, miserable or sad at times. These feelings don’t usually last longer than a week or two, and they don’t interfere too much with our lives. Sometimes there’s a reason, sometimes not. We usually cope - we may talk to a friend but don’t otherwise need any help.

However, in depression:

- your feelings don’t lift after a few days – they carry on for weeks or months
- are so bad that they interfere with your life.

What does it feel like?

Most people with depression will not have all the symptoms listed below, but most will have at least five or six.

You:

- feel unhappy most of the time (but may feel a little better in the evenings)
- lose interest in life and can’t enjoy anything
- find it harder to make decisions
- can’t cope with things that you used to
- feel utterly tired
- feel restless and agitated
- lose appetite and weight (some people find they do the reverse and put on weight)
- take 1-2 hours to get off to sleep, and then wake up earlier than usual
- lose interest in sex
- lose your self-confidence
- feel useless, inadequate and hopeless
- avoid other people
- feel irritable
- feel worse at a particular time each day, usually in the morning
- think of suicide

You may not realise how depressed you are for a while, especially if it has come on gradually. You try to struggle on and may even start to blame yourself for being lazy or lacking willpower. It sometimes takes a friend or a partner to persuade you that there really is a problem which can be helped.

You may start to notice pains, constant headaches or sleeplessness. Physical symptoms like this can be the first sign of depression.

A lot of people ask what I do when I'm sad; so these are some things that I do and you could try too. Let me know if any of these ...
Interactive, not static

- Discussion forums
- Respect confidentiality
- Quizzes, but not if topic is “too serious”
- Chatting/texting with a trusted counsellor
- Chatting/texting is better than phone
- Games must hold their interest
Other results

- They do not know what is available
- Poor health literacy
- Disagreements on judging credibility
- Trust issues are prominent
Methods of engagement: How did we find this out?

mindyourmind exists in the space where mental health, wellness, engagement and technology meet. We work with young people aged 14-29 to co-create interactive tools and innovative resources to build capacity and resilience.
“Young people who are engaged affectively, cognitively and behaviourally participate fully and become co-creators with adults as partners. They are loyal, invested and because of this will be more likely to talk to their peers about their involvement. Interactions and communications are delivered in a manner that reflects a young person’s world view and incorporates pillars of youth culture in the delivery and presentation.”

• Icebreakers, favourite bands and websites, making name tags, food, comfortable social settings

Result: “Let’s just say I hugged the phone.”

Meanwhile in Scotland…
From Scottish Government’s Mental Health Strategy, 2017-2020

“Develop more accessible psychological self-help resources and support national rollout of computerised CBT [cognitive behavioural therapy] with NHS 24, by 2018.”

“Other opportunities also exist through peer support, digital tools and better use of electronic information because these offer huge potential for widening access, supporting co-production and self-management.”

Refers to the new Digital Health and Care Strategy…

‘I have access to the digital information, tools and services I need to help maintain and improve my health and wellbeing.’

Resources

Finding mental health information and support online can be difficult. Where do you start?

Aye Mind is working to identify resources to support mental wellbeing for young people. We have gathered a wide range of examples for you to explore. We do not endorse or recommend particular resources – being featured on our database does not imply proof of effectiveness. We encourage you to carefully explore resource before you use them. We have created material in our Toolkit that offers guidance on assessing the value of digital resources – see our Digital Tools Section for example. Be curious, but stay critical!
